

Welcome to the Oxford International Curriculum

We are delighted to welcome you to a new approach to teaching and learning with the Oxford International Curriculum.

By choosing to follow the Oxford International Curriculum, you are supporting our mission at Oxford University Press, as part of the University of Oxford, to promote excellence in learning and teaching worldwide.

We are living in an ever-changing world, where the way we learn, communicate and relate to one another is constantly shifting. In this climate, we need to instil in our learners the skills to equip them for every eventuality so they are able to overcome challenges, adapt to change and have the best chance of success. To do this, we need to evolve beyond traditional teaching approaches and foster an environment where students can start to build lifelong learning skills for success.

That's why the Oxford International Curriculum offers a new approach that places joy at the heart of the learning journey, enabling students to discover the happiness learning can bring and develop essential life skills to thrive in an ever-changing world.

By recognising that lasting success is contingent on both academic performance and emotional wellbeing, the Oxford International Curriculum aims to deliver the wellbeing and global skills that will be needed in the future, to the learners of today, providing them with the tools to navigate and contribute to our global society.

We look forward to working with you to nurture creativity, inspire curiosity, and shape the future.

Handwritten signature of Bruce Neale.

Bruce Neale
Managing Director International – Oxford Education